

QUINCY, July 10.

R. T. Fuller, who has just arrived on an extra train from the west, brings the following, This morning at 9 o'clock, a company of horsemen, secessionists, numbering probably one hundred, commanded by John Owens, made demonstrations at Monroe Station, thirty miles west of here. They burned the station house, six coaches, eighteen freight cars, tore up a few rails each side of the town, and left.

A much larger force of cavalry was supposed to be a short distance off, concealed.

Capt. Ralston, who is here for troops to aid Col. Smith at Monroe, says the Colonel with 300 of his men is surrounded by about 2000 cavalry and in imminent danger.— Capt. Ralston belongs to Smith's regiment and should know where the men are, and it is generally believed the story is true.

Rumor says that the Home Guards, some hundred strong, leave this morning.

Col. Grant's regiment, which has been in Naples the past day or two, are ordered here to-morrow morning.

Col. Palmer, whose regiment is stationed at Canton, will be brought down as early as possible. A boat has gone up for that purpose.
